erfection by skillful breeding and feeding.

An error has existed for many years and still axist, concerning the are of mules. Size has seen made a measure of value in the mule, almost regar less of form and spirit, and so it has seen in their sire, the jack.

I have been employing a mule team for wently-the years in the cultivation of cotton in Mi assign, and my team now numbers one hundred. If this time I have used every variety of a soule forcent the most inferior kind) that nded for active labor and those intended for the lat manufacture pen.

Aduable to the Southern planters than the produce of Kentucky under her present system.

This no doubt to some extent is the fault of the purchasers south, who have not generally discovered their error. They demand large rises, and pay in proportion to size; and this, in part, explains the policy of Kentucky. My opinion is, that size in a mule is nothing after they reach fifteen hands high, and that many under that height come up to the standard value, fitted for cotton plantations.

The North changes the South and its in little tion with being aggressive. Is this so? The natural position, and the one that the South eves to occ py, is that of quietude. She asks to be let alone, relying for the protection and ance of her rights on the guarantees afforded by the Constitution. There is a class of wspapers at the North, of which the New York Tribune stands foremost, whose vocation appears to be to pour out denunciation upon the South. In their eyes, no good can come out of that section of the Union. Judging from their talk, one would think that the States in which slavery has existence are settled exclusively by bad men, whose most strenuous endeavor continua y directed toward crushing the people of the North. If the aggressive spirit of the South is to be strated by reference to the passage of the Nebraska bill, we oppose to it simply a denial that to the South is due either the origin or final onsummation of that measure. There was nothing in the course of the South on this measure to justify the following harsh language used by the Cincinnati Cazette: The repeal of the Missouri compromise was a gratuitous insult to the sixteen free States, which has not been and which never will be forgotten. The evils of that repeal will remain until the repealing act is itself rejealed, and to that end thitree States, under the head of little lowa, will structure that the respect to the residence.
